Hey Girls,

First the bad stuff! I picked up a copy of the Advocate the other day and read that a dear old sister from yesteryear is no longer with us. The infamous "Marsha P. Johnson" from the Hot Peaches Review was found in the Hudson River! Known to me and many others as "Miss Marsha," this poor, dear soul deserved a better ending to her very hard and difficult life. I only hope they get to the bottom of what happened to her! If any of you back-east girls get wind of what happened to Marsha, and find out anything at all, I want to know — PLEASE!

Now, on with the rest of life. As it appears to me, the East Coast is jumpin' with wild things to do on a Saturday night. Unfortunately for some of my girlfriends, too much of a bad thing has ruined some of them. The drug problem has taken its toll on more than a few beauties this past year.

I am not one to dwell on the negative or mention names in that light, but the stories I've been hearing prompts me to say there are some people who have worked for me in the past that better get some help—quick! Yes, life is tough, but don't throw your youth and what's left of your beauty down the tubes without at least trying. There are many places to get free counseling and advice for anyone out there who is facing the same curse of a drug-dependent life in a dress!

On a lighter note, I wish to thank all the new contributors as well as the regulars who send their works of art, letters and stories. It makes me feel like I really am doing something worthwhile after all when I see such a quick response. The coming year looks like a booming success already in terms of great material for you the readers, so thank you one and all!

Love always, Kim Christy

GIRLFRIENDS

There's nothing in the world as sweet as two girlfriends in their prime of youth helping each other through the rough roads of transformation. These girls really make an effort to keep the other in-check in a very caring way that has nothing to do with sex! Whether on the street or on the stage, their friendship's at its level best, both making sure the other is protected and always doing the right, lady-like things!

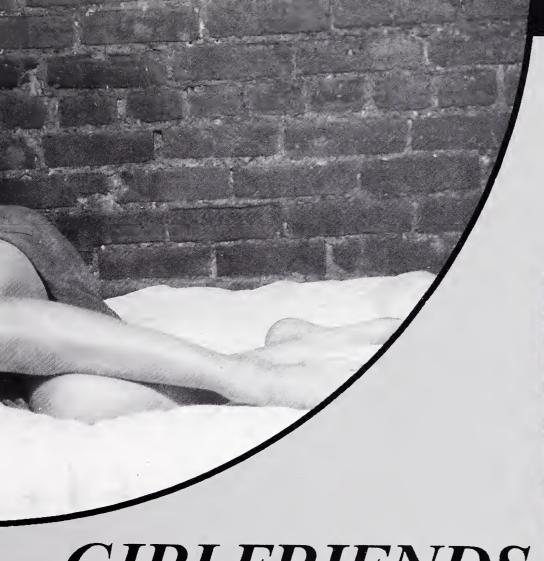

What a great example for all of us. The buddy system lives!

They never fight or pick on each other, they always ask about using each other's clothes and make-up, and when it comes to boyfriends, they toss a coin rather than spoil a good thing with petty jealousy. Once in a while they do share themselves with one man. The lucky devil must of thought he was in heaven, not knowing which way to turn with these two hot bookends!

JERNIFER THOMAS

Jennifer is one of the most beautiful she-males on earth! At 5'11" (taller in heels), 123 lbs., and with a face and body to die for, Jennifer always exudes an aura of charm and grace.

Letters to KIM

If you wish to write to Kim and possibly have your letter published please send all correspondence to F.M.I., POB 1622, Studio City, CA 91614. All letters sent are considered for unconditional publication unless otherwise specified. If you wish to have your pictures published as well, please see the new requirements for models releases and ID on page 39.

Dear Kim,

I've just picked up my first issue of F.M.I. (No. 66). Talk about a great work of art. Your girls are out of this world.

I'd like to say that I've been a closet TV for as long as I can remember. When I was younger, my mom found me in her clothes. After a lot of doctors, she came to me with the idea of having a sex change. It scared the hell out of me for I didn't know what I wanted to be (at the time, I was a starter on the school football team).

As I pondered the idea later after school, it excited me, but then it was too late. I got married and was trying to become a real man. But whenever I was alone, I would dress up in any of my wife's clothing that would fit me.

Now I'm 40, on my own and am looking forward to starting a complete wardrobe. I also took out an ad in hopes of meeting a special someone to help me grow with my feelings.

If there's anything else I need to know or do, please let me know, or one of your regular readers can help. I'm looking towards a great new life.

Thank you for a wonderful mag!

Love, W.W.

Dear W.W.,

It's so fulfilling to welcome a new "sister" into the fold. With the steps you're taking to discover your inner-self, you certainly don't need my advice. Just keep doing what you're doing — we all support you!

Write soon to let us all know how you're progressing. Good luck!

Love, Kim

Review of ''Q & A"

In films, it's inevitable that crossdressers perform one of three functions: exotic but harmless entertainers in films like "Torch Song Trilogy" or "Outrageous"; as psychotic killers as in "Dressed to Kill"; or as emblems of decadence as in "Cabaret."

In this latter incarnation, TVs are the doomed canaries in the cultural coal mine, clueing audiences to the ultimate in societal degeneracy. In the Bernardo Bertolucci film "The Conformist" for instance, we're told through flashbacks that the fascist protagonist's cowardly personality was formed by a traumatic encounter with a molester who "has a kimono at home" and who sports long flowing hair under his chauffeur's cap.

Similarly, Arthur Penn's film "Mickey One," the tone of grotesque depravity is set by the brief appearance of a little man whose neurotic attempts to steal a moment for some erotic pleasure by making pathetically seductive faces in a mirror as he plays with a bonnet purport to give the audience a depressingly "true-to-life" glimpse into the very compulsive world of crossdressing. Significantly, when the hero returns, the man flees like a roach from the light.

The latest in this venerable depiction of crossdressers as society's last gasp is Sidney Lumet's film "Q & A." Yet another of Lumet's explorations of big city corruption, "Q & A" is far arittier than either "Serpico" or "Prince of the City." Part of the grit is provided by the presence of drag queens. "Q & A" uses real female impersonators (perhaps Paul Hogan was skittish about performing with a real queen. Nonetheless, "Crocodile Dundee" was yet another emblematic use of TVs to embody big city rot.)

What sets "Q & A" apart from most films which exploits JVs for their overripe symbolism is their integral part in the movie's convoluted plot, not as stick figures, but as actual characters, thinly defined though they may be. Their symbolic presence is muted, though it is not totally overshadowed, by their presence as hapless victims of the corrupt power structure which ultimately destroys everyone in its grinding pervasiveness.

In this movie, queens are the sacrificial lambs that delineate the sadism of both sides of the law. In one scene, Brennan, the corrupt cop played by Nick Nolte, gathers a covey of prostitutes round him and humiliates a drag hustler into admitting his maleness by grabbing his balls. Later, a Puerto Rican druglord is embarrassed after a queen approaches him in front of his wife. The queen (played by International Chryssis) is taken to the bathroom where the gangster viciously berates her and then performs the ultimate humiliation: he pulls off her wig.

Ultimately, the queens are dispatched in scenes which mingle sex and death. Helpless to stop their inevitable destruction, they are both terrorized and hypnotically entranced by Brennan's brutal domination. It's unfortunate that "Q & A" uses International Chryssis as a dazzling but powerless victim when the actress was, in real life, a durable survivor of the drag scene for more than twenty years. Still, this movie inches toward a three-dimensional portrayal and queens, though not completely human, are more than mere props on a decadent stage set.

Tragically "Q & A" was both the biggest and last part for International Chryssis who died last year. One of the fixtures of the New York drag scene, many will remember her as the loveliest of the crossdresser's who's portrayed in a book of photographic essays called "The Queens," which was published in the mid 1970s (the book also featured Kim Christy.) In this book, where she just called herself "Chryssis," her absolute confidence in her femininity, in some ways, makes her the least interesting of the crossdressers featured. She seemed to be no more than simply an exotic-looking young woman.

But despite ease in passing and trips to cosmetic surgeons to embellish her beauty, she remained, genetically at least, a male till the end, if we can believe the innuendo served up in Michael Musto's column in the "Village Voice," a column which had regularly featured Chryssis cavorting decorously through the NY nouveau drag scene.

In her capacity as the ever luscious grande dame of NYC drag, International Chryssis provided a unique link between two eras of female impersonation. In the late 1960s and early '70s she performed in the New York's glam clubs and 20 years later was still making the scene among the hipper, campier drag stars of Pyramid Club and Limelight.

Though she had a walk-on role in a 1960s movie based on the play "The Private Ear," a part in which once again she performs the symbolic function of introducing the country yokel to big-city life, I'm not aware of any other films she appeared in.

For all its other shortcomings, and there are many, "Q & A" has the distinction of capturing the elegant and exotic beauty of International Chryssis forever in celluloid.

TV Prostitutes

Well, it's kindly, old transvestite film critic here with important fashion news for TVs everywhere. If you are between the ages of 45 and 80, please don't wear a bustier to any McDonald's. It frightens the kids and puts their parents right off their feed.

In film news, "Forever Mary," an Italian film with "To Sir With Love" aspirations, has come to New York. The plot in brief concerns an idealistic teacher who goes to work at a boy's reform school where he meets the delectable Mary/Mario, a transvestite prostitute arrested for knifing a customer.

Their interchange is presumably uplifting for both of them, though it's not certain from my gleanings whether Mary sheds her bra for a polo shirt at the end. They do exchange, what I'm told, a rather chaste kiss.

According to the review in the "Village Voice," Mary is more of an androgynous male model type than the stuff TV dreams are made of. The ads in the "Times" bear this out. He's not really a drag queen at all, just a long-haired lad with big lips who wouldn't be out of place in an Obsession ad or Madonna video.

Transvestite prostitutes are all the rage these days it seems. In yesterday's paper alone there were two separate references, and we're talking about the "Albuquerque Journal." In one article, Albuquerque police had been accused by an exdrug informant of consorting with TV prostitutes for both business and pleasure. This is interesting gossip for this backwater burg and I'll be following the story as it develops.

Scenic Southwestern aside: prostitutes in Albuquerque are a hardy breed. Unlike their big city counterparts, they must ply their wares far up Central Avenue near the suburbs. The downtown, long abandoned by most people after dark, doesn't have the market anymore, though a few hotels must keep some of them busy.

In the main though, most of the whores walk the familiar blasted American landscape of used car lots and gun shops, oriental food stores and Der Wienershnitzel, which is their appropriate gathering place day or night. Continued on page 20

"Let me tease that hair, girl! Put more lips on, honey, and put on these earrings. We're going to show 'em a thing or two about dressing like a girl and acting like a whore!" What could be nicer?

"Open that closet and get out those drags before my mom gets home!" Loud shuffling can be heard as these two boy-girls rush around the house, trying to make a drag ball of their very own with panties, slips, lace tights — and Momma's high-heels. "Hurry, now. We don't want to get caught!"

The other article involving TV whores involved the hapless Rodney King, the poor man the L.A. cops beat so mercilessly on videotape. It seems Rodney picked up a lady/boy of the evening who was under surveillance by the vice squad. A chase ensued and Rodney was arrested for trying to run down an officer.

Given the political situation there, it seems more likely that Mr. King was the one under surveillance and not the drag queen. At any rate, this will mitigate their disgusting acts of violence by "proving" that Mr. King was really a criminal after all.

The third TV prosty story is rather old news, but since we're in the neighborhood: some months ago ex"Partridge Family" moppet star Danny Bonaduce was arrested for beating up a TV prostitute. It seems Danny picked up the lad, paid him for a sex act, presumably fellatio, and then shook him down for the money later. It wasn't clear from the news accounts I read whether a) Danny knew his date was really a boy or b) whether any sex act was committed.

I must say, whether he is acquitted or not, he acquitted himself rather well on one of the tabloid news shows about the fucked up lives of TV (that is, television) kids. He was cracking jokes and singing the old Partridge songs. Of course. he was not permitted to discuss his latest legal hassle to his everlasting relief, but he did talk breezily about his other arrests (cocaine possession) and gave the impression of another put-upon bon vivant.

Bonaduce currently makes his living as a radio disk jockey, which is certainly punishment enough.

The question in all these drag whore stories is what did the iohns know and when did they know it? These days, the drag prostitutes are more than likely to outclass their natural-born competition, especially when the standard of beauty is now defined by the exotic but narrow cosmetic practices of a few of your typical Hollywood Boulevardiers.

On any given rainy night, a homegirl/boy can be mistaken for Julia Roberts, given the cataracts of lust and those clouds of expectation that can befog a customer's vision.

I prefer to think that they knew what they were getting into (or onto, as the case may be). How do we account for the popularity of this third sex which, according to Michael Musto, is proliferating like things in a petri dish in the New York demimonde. Musto's accounts of rock stars choosing TV groupies over the real thing ("they were prettier"), are just commonplace as well as his numerous blind items about celebrities sharing the favors of the cunt-impaired.

Just what is it about today's young boy/girls that is so appealing and so dangerously irresistable, given the high stakes disease-wise?

A number of answers spring to mind: a) they try harder, b) they are always ready, c) in many cases they afford the customer a chance at a multicultural sexual experience that he may not find in his daily or routine sexual liaisons, d) they are prettier.

In general, the popularity of girl/boys, she-males and drag queens seems just another symptom of a sexual revolution that has run its course, with both camps exhausted and unfurling the barbed wire around their circling wagons. She-males can offer same-sex solace together with an outrageous burlesque of femininity which soothes the homophobic beast within.

It's a burlesque of womanhood that drag queens have been celebrating for years. The difference today is that this narrow definition of the feminine has been embraced not just by drag queens, but by the western media world: MTV, "Vogue," "Elle" and Madonna, the ultimate blow-up doll (perhaps her next outrage will be to grow a penis).

Can men be blamed if they are taken in by this media barrage which assaults men and women alike with this impossible drag personna of women? Of course they can!

But it's not fair for women to claim total innocence in this reductionism. Those fashion moguls who design ad layouts in the tall towers of Madison Ave. aren't just men anymore.

It's hard to escape the idea that drag is King (or Queen) these days. Harder to understand is what that portends for the relationship between men and women.

In other news: "The Queens," a documentary made in the late 1960s about a drag beauty pageant, is inching toward the video stores. Additionally, the producer has been smitten by my idea of addending a postscript interview with Miss Harlow (the winner of the contest) as she is today: a very successful businesswoman. I am hoping that I help distribute the film to the TV world, but that may be out of the question. I'll keep you all posted.

Finally, may I take a moment to complain for a moment. I've been writing these columns now for a few months, and the feedback has been minimal. About three people! I have suffered with this silence long enough and now I'm bitching publicly about it (my therapist's advice, don't you know).

At any rate, if you like or even better — if you hate what I write about, let me know. I'm lonely, stuck in this godforsaken sinkhole of a town without work, in the middle of a recession and having a mid-life crisis on top of that. Talk to me, already!
